

APARTHEID KILLS

Every day blaek people are dying in South Africa. School children are shot in the street, young people and children are tortured in police cells, men and women are arrested and held for long periods under "emergency regulations". Millions continue to live in poverty.

So why does TESCO still sell South African goods?

MAKE YOUR PROTEST NOW

- Don't buy South African goods

All goods sold in the UK must state their country of origin. Look at the label carefully. If it says Republic of South Africa or Namibia don't buy it. Be particularly careful with tinned goods (apples, peaches, pears, guavas, pineapples, plums, oranges, mandarins etc) and fresh fruit – especially OUTSPAN and VALENCIA oranges and all CAPE fruit.

- Complain to the Manager and tell him or her that you strongly object to the South African goods displayed on their shelves. Don't stop there – write to TESCO's Board of Directors, to your MP, sign our petitions, join our picket and the Anti-Apartheid Movement. Don't stop your protests until you are certain that all South African goods have been withdrawn from sale.

- We are winning

Already public pressure has forced management to withdraw South African goods from Tesco stores in Brixton, Bristol and elsewhere. Why not your supermarket? Many small stores are already "Apartheid-Free". Look for our distinctive Black and Yellow Sticker.
